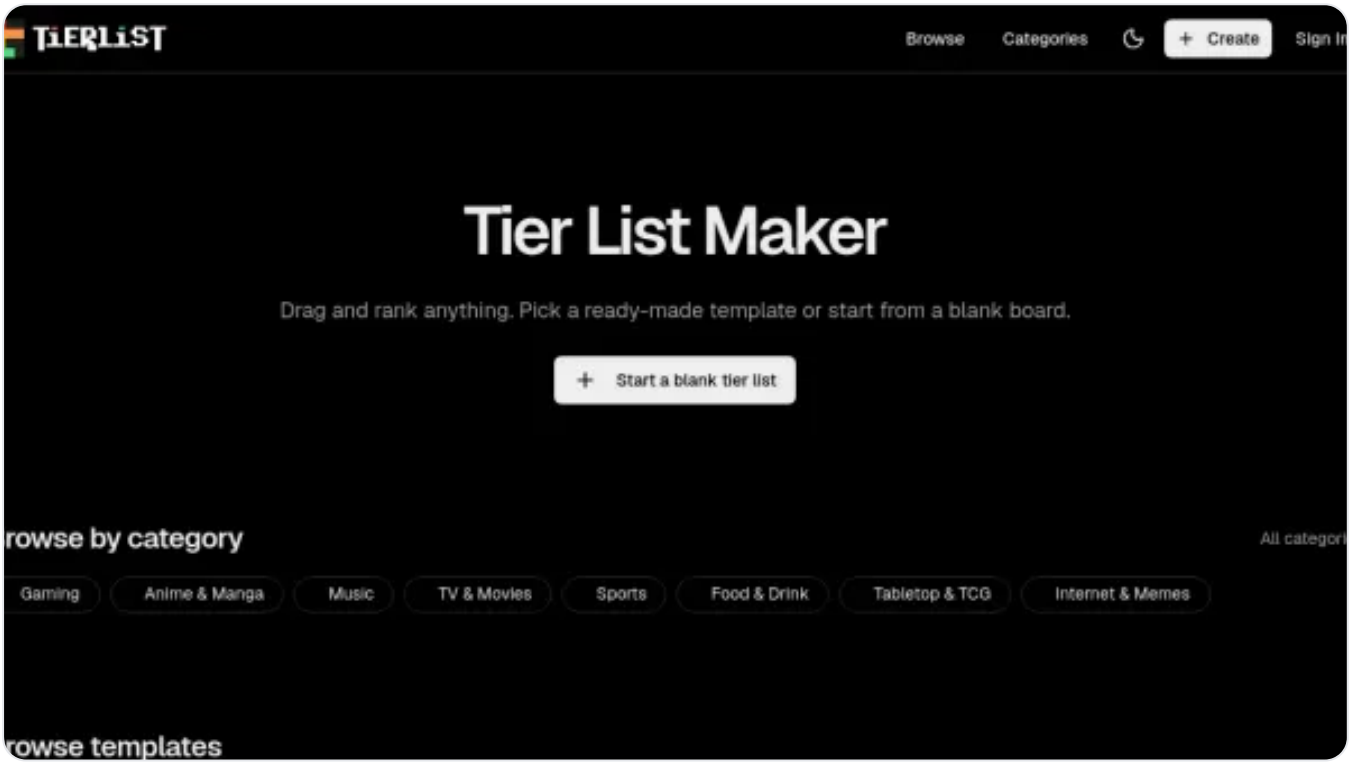
Tier List Maker

Free online tier list maker for dragging, ranking, and sharing image-based tier lists.



About

Tier List Maker is a tier list maker for dragging, ranking, and sharing image-based lists in your browser. It lets you start from a ready-made template or a blank board, place items into S through F tiers, and publish the result as a link or image without installing software.

What is Tier List Maker

Tier List Maker is a tier list maker for people who want to rank images, characters, games, shows, or other items in a clean drag-and-drop layout. It runs online in the browser and is presented as a free tool with no sign-up required for the basic workflow described on the site. The main job of this tier list maker is simple: let you sort items into tiers such as S, A, B, C, and D, then share the finished ranking with other people.

The site also organizes popular template pages around specific fandoms and categories. Examples shown on the homepage include anime, gaming, music, TV and movies, sports, food and drink, tabletop and TCG, and internet and memes. That makes the tier list maker useful both as a general ranking tool and as a shortcut when you want to start from a familiar template instead of building a list from scratch.

Key features

This tier list maker focuses on fast visual ranking rather than complex editing.

- Drag-and-drop ranking: move items into tiers by dragging them between rows.
- Blank or template-based start: begin with a ready-made layout or create a fresh tier list.
- Image-friendly workflow: the homepage describes the app as a way to rank images, which fits character grids, game rosters, and meme collections.
- Share options: the site says you can share your ranking with a link or image.
- Category browsing: templates are grouped into browsing areas like Anime & Manga, Gaming, Music, and Internet & Memes.
- Large template library: examples on the homepage show counts such as 323 anime items, 191 League of Legends champions, and 326 Italian brainrot characters, which suggests the template catalog is broad.
- No-download access: the app is meant to work directly in the browser.

The tier list maker is strongest when the goal is social sharing. You can use it to settle debates, post a ranking to friends, or publish a visual opinion piece without setting up design software. Because the interface is centered on tiers, the tier list maker keeps the process close to the familiar format used across gaming and fandom communities.

How to use it

Using this tier list maker is straightforward and mostly follows the same path whether you want a template or a custom board.

Browse categories if you want a prebuilt starting point, such as Anime, Gaming, or Sports.

Drag the items into the tiers you want, moving higher-priority picks toward the top rows.

Adjust the placement until the ranking matches your opinion.

Share the completed tier list with a link or export it as an image.

If you are making a tier list maker project from a specific fandom, it helps to pick the closest template first so you do not have to add every item manually. If you are ranking something niche, starting blank gives you more control and avoids forcing your list into the structure of a preset template.

Who it is for

This tier list maker is a good fit for people who want a quick visual ranking without learning design tools.

Creators who post fandom rankings or opinion content.

Gamers comparing champions, characters, teams, or equipment.

Anime, movie, and TV fans making shareable list posts.

Community moderators or group chat organizers who want a simple debate format.

Anyone who needs a tier list maker for a one-off ranking and does not want to install software.

It is especially useful when the audience already understands tier-list culture. Since the site includes many fandom-specific pages, the tier list maker works well for topics where people expect a ranked visual format and want to compare choices quickly.

What to know before you use it

This tier list maker is free to use according to the homepage, but the site text does not spell out a paid plan, export limits, or account limitations beyond the visible “no account needed” messaging for basic use. If you need detailed project history, team collaboration, or advanced image editing, those capabilities are not described on the site and may not be part of the tool.

A tier list maker is also only as accurate as the ranking you put into it. It does not verify whether your tiers are objectively correct, and it does not replace official or authoritative sources for things like game balance, sports standings, or release information. For example, if you are building a tier list maker page about current meta picks or rankings that change often, double-check patch notes, official rosters, or publisher updates before publishing.

The templates shown on the site are a big advantage, but they can also be incomplete for niche topics. If a category is missing the exact roster you need, the blank board is the safer choice. In short, this tier list maker is best for fast, visual, shareable ranking, while the final judgment and any factual claims still belong to you.
